

than keeping it inside as a movie on the big screen where it belongs, so our civilization can remain intact.

And perhaps it's possible that our right handed civilization is not doomed to a final judgement of self destruction but will potentially be redeemed by left handed spirit, using the machine not as a weapon but as a vehicle for redemption, enlightenment and beauty.

In the movie Avatar, warfare ends when two opposing sides are finally able to see each other.

There has to be a way to get from where we are to a brighter future without a detour through hell on Earth.

Was America called onto the world stage to devastate our Earth with the full force of her arsenal in a battle against evil? Or was she called onto the world stage to wake us from our nightmare to become the dream of World Spirit? The true genius of our nation is a legacy of peacefully uniting diverse states and peoples together for a more perfect union. When American empire comes to an end, we will finally be able to carry out our true calling; empowering nations to become states of a global country at peace and prosperity, uniting humanity into a planetary civilization to realize Martin Luther King's beautiful dream without a Third World War.

The highest potential of America and our species is patiently waiting for our full allegiance. We must choose good without the need for evil so liberty and justice may finally ring true for "all".

Religions of the West; Christianity, Judaism and Islam, all have a legacy of teaching an "End Times" of destruction for the world must precede global peace.

But can the greatest good only be realized, after we experience the greatest evil? Even in the secular vision of Star Trek, World War III is unavoidable before humanity can unite the Earth.

Will the last battle lead us to a world at peace, free of tyranny with humanity finally united by a universal religion into one family as citizens of the global country? In a world of weapons of mass destruction, this violent path into harmony seems highly unlikely.

Why is this conception of good needing evil so prominent in religion? Perhaps the masses are pulled towards this cosmic battle for the same reason they are drawn to the dramatic and glorious stories in movies about the war between darkness and light.

Of the top 21 highest grossing world-wide movies of all time, each involves epic battles between good and evil.

If most of humanity is primarily attracted to stories featuring this conflict, what does this create for ourselves in the world?

Do our politicians share a taste for drama?

"axis of evil"

What would the hero be without the villain? What would good be without evil?

...but the reality of war against evil in our world shows something less than glorious.

There must be a better choice available to us.

Script 1 - Secular script based on Star Trek world view

600 million casualties - Earth isn't destroyed but gets seriously messed up.

Script 2 - Theist script based on Biblical world-view

2 billion casualties - Earth must be destroyed before it can be saved.

It must be possible to yet choose the path of wisdom hero and avoid the evil envisioned for our future to replace it with a much more desirable outcome.

New script bridging the divide

Few to no casualties. World War III averted through a dramatic turn in humanity's course before we must witness the full scale horror of the evil we can unleash upon ourselves.

We must all come to see that scenarios in favorite movies of the mainstream, need not come to fruition in the real world.

There must be a way to break history's endless loop; to finally protect and cherish the voice for peace rather than see it silenced or assassinated as an obstacle to war. Only then can we work towards something much more favorable than worst case scenario thinking (good needs evil) so many humans subconsciously are addicted to creating and seeing unfold in the outside world rather
